reported severely wounded on the lat-est casualty list.

Mrs. Lela Davis, 1409 Thirty-first street northwest, the mother of the three boys, received word of her son's wound from the Red Cross, almost two months ago. A few weeks after she received a letter from the young man himself, telling the story of how man himself, telling the story of how he was wounded.

About 3 o'clock on the afternoon of July 20, Davis was shot, and left unconscious in No Man's Land. He remembers recovering consciousness about three hours later, and crawling into a shell hole for protection. Sev-eral hours later an American soldier found him and carried him back to the front-line hospital where his wound was treated. Davis was born in Richmond, Va.,

Davis was born in Richmond, Va., twenty-three years ago, and came to this city when quite young. He attended the public schools until his second year in Western High School, leaving to accept a position with the Potomac Bank. A year later the trouble with Mexico broke out, and Davis enlisted and went to the bor-der, where he remained nine months. After the declaration of war against Germany the young soldier was sent to France. After a few months he requested After a rew months he requested that he be sent to the front, even though it meant losing his rank of sergeant. His request was granted, and he was ordered to the front line trenches. Shortly afterwards he reeived his wound.
